THE WORLD COALITION AGAINST THE DEATH PENALTY

The World Coalition Against the Death Penalty was created in 2002 to reinforce the international dimension of the fight against the death penalty. It brings together 158 NGOs, bar associations, trade unions and public bodies that are active across the world, to support the abolition of the death penalty.

The World Coalition endeavours to strengthen international action in the fight against the death penalty; to lead and coordinate international action (particularly lobbying); to bring together new abolitionists and to increase its influence in countries where capital punishment still exists as part of national legislation.

The World Coalition helps create national and regional coalitions and organise worldwide events.

In 2003, the World Coalition established World Day against the Death Penalty on 10th October. This day is observed all over the world and especially in countries that continue to use the death penalty.

10th October: World Day Against the Death Penalty

Every year the World Coalition Against the Death Penalty asks the citizens, organisations and institutions fighting for universal abolition of the death penalty to organise hundreds of initiatives across the world on 10th October.
The World Days Against the Death Penalty

There are a number of aims:

- Put pressure on States which retain capital punishment to abolish it and demand a definitive end to death sentences and executions around the world;
- Strengthen abolitionist civil society, particularly in countries which still use the death penalty;
- Promote and extend the World Coalition Against the Death Penalty to strengthen its representativeness internationally;
- Legitimise the establishment of the World Day on 10th October every year with international and regional institutions and organisations.

Among the most memorable World Days the first resulted in intense activism, as did the 10th October 2007 which focused on supporting the UN resolution for a moratorium on executions. The 2007 World Day demonstrated that the resolution for a moratorium on the application of the death penalty was supported by civil society, something which contributed to its success. Since then three other resolutions for a moratorium have been voted upon, each time with a growing number of votes. In 2007 the World Day Against the Death Penalty was also officially recognised as the European Day Against the Death Penalty by the Council of Europe and the European Union.

The impact of the 2011 World Day, focusing on the inhumanity of the death penalty, was also striking: international organisations and abolitionist countries took action alongside NGOs. Since then, the UN Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights have published reports on the death penalty classifying it as cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment.

The 10th World Day was a record breaker in terms of activism, with more than 400 initiatives recorded in 76 countries, and media coverage with more than 370 press cuttings in 90 countries.

Finally, the number of retentionist countries involved in the World Day has continued to increase since 2003. In ten years, media outlets in 123 countries have published information about the World Day Against the Death Penalty, nearly two thirds of the planet.
1. No state should have the power to takes a citizen’s life.
2. It is irrevocable: no justice system is safe from judicial error and innocent people are likely to be sentenced to death.
3. It does not keep society safe: it has never been shown that the death penalty deters crimes more effectively than other punishments.
4. It is unfair: the death penalty is discriminatory and is often used disproportionately against the poor, the mentally ill, those from racial and ethnic minorities, and in some places because of sexual orientation or religion.
5. Not all murder victims’ families want the death penalty: A large and growing number of victims’ families worldwide reject the death penalty and are speaking out against it, saying it does not bring back or honour their murdered family member, does not heal the pain of the murder, and violates their ethical and religious beliefs.
6. It creates more pain: the death penalty inflicts pain on the families of those on death row and causes great pain to the family members of those who have been executed.
7. It is inhuman, cruel and degrading: the dreadful conditions on death row inflict extreme psychological suffering and execution is a physical and mental assault.
8. It is applied overwhelmingly in violation of international standards: it breaches the principles of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that everyone has the right to life and that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. It is also in contradiction with the international trend towards abolition reflected by four votes at the United Nations General Assembly calling for the establishment of a moratorium on the use of the death penalty (resolutions 62/149, 63/168, 65/206 and 67/176 adopted in December 2007, 2008, 2010 and 2012).
9. It is inefficient: time and money are diverted from other more efficient law enforcement measures.
10. It denies any possibility of rehabilitation to the criminal.

10 reasons to end the Death Penalty

Information and mobilisation tools

To encourage participation in the World Day Against the Death Penalty by as many people as possible and to strengthen abolitionist civil society, particularly in countries which still use the death penalty, the World Coalition develops information and mobilisation tools each year.

They can be used by its members, the media and anyone wanting to participate in the World Day to raise awareness and encourage local activism in as many countries as possible.

The tools were posted to all members of the World Coalition and its partners at the beginning of July 2013. Parcels were also sent to more than 60 NGOs in the Caribbean to inform and encourage them to participate in the World Day.

The information leaflet

The information leaflet on the 2013 World Day provided a summary of the situation of the death penalty in the Caribbean, arguments against the death penalty and some ideas for possible activities.

It was also printed in Spanish to meet the needs of members working in the Caribbean. Nearly 10,000 copies were printed and circulated in English, French and Spanish, and it was downloaded nearly 800 times on the World Coalition website.

The World Day poster

4,000 copies were printed in English and French and distributed to all members of the World Coalition. Organisers of events could order it free of charge from the World Coalition secretariat. Some members of the World Coalition translated it into their own languages and it was available to everyone electronically in ten languages (German, English, Arabic, Chinese, Spanish, Farsi, French, Italian, Japanese and Russian).
Death penalty facts and figures
This document on the application of the death penalty around the world in 2012 and the beginning of 2013 was a reference document for all those wanting to find out about the death penalty.

"The documents were a useful source of basic information, what you need to know, both on the death penalty and the theme chosen for 2013."
FIDH (France)

Detailed fact sheet on the evolution of the death penalty in the Caribbean
The sheet is divided into 7 sections:
• the procedure for imposing the death penalty in the Caribbean,
• regional human rights mechanisms,
• a comparison of English-speaking and Spanish-speaking countries,
• the development of regional jurisprudence,
• mandatory death sentences,
• cruel and inhuman treatment,
• and the inefficiency of the death penalty. It was available online in French and English, and was downloaded more than 700 times.

The Mobilisation Kit
Produced to assist organisers, it suggests possible action and provides information about the World Day and the theme chosen.
For example, "10 things you can do for 10/10" suggested 10 things to do within the framework of the World Day such as participating in an artistic project, organising an event or sending letters to prisoners sentenced to death. It also gave 10 tips for successful action and provided members' contact details by country.
It was available on the World Coalition website in English, Chinese, Spanish and French. This was the most downloaded tool: more than 1,440 downloads in all languages. It was also sent to nearly 500 organisations around the world.

Petitions
For the World Day, the World Coalition Against the Death Penalty asked Trinidad and Tobago and Barbados to definitively abolish mandatory imposition of the death penalty for all crimes, and Guatemala to abolish the death penalty in its legislation for all crimes.
These petitions were also open to signature on the online petitions platform change.org and could be downloaded in seven languages from the World Coalition website.
The petition for Trinidad and Tobago and Barbados gathered 9,159 signatures.
The petition for Guatemala attracted 12,705 signatures.
The petitions will be passed to the authorities concerned after consultation with the local members of the World Coalition in 2014.

The Website
The World Day pages of the World Coalition website were consulted more than 23,700 times and peaked around 10th October.
Between 9th and 11th October people from 158 different countries consulted the World Coalition's website with a strong representation from Caribbean nations compared to previous years.
It should also be noted that the pages in Spanish were read more frequently than in previous years and were slightly ahead of the pages in French, although they remain far behind the pages in English. Most members indicated that they had visited the site at least once a day around the World Day to obtain information, download documents and find out more about activities connected to 10th October.

"I used the website to find information about members of the World Coalition, the detailed fact sheets and brochures on previous World Days, to access the extranet, etc. I also downloaded documents for this World Day and used them as an information source to prepare my presentations and documents."
The Advocates for Human Rights (United States):
The Death Penalty Around the World

Abolitionist and non-abolitionist countries

On 1 January 2014 more than two thirds of the world’s countries had abolished the death penalty in law or in practice:

• 98 countries had abolished capital punishment for all crimes;¹
• 7 countries had abolished the death penalty for all crimes except exceptional crimes such as those committed during times of war²;
• 35 countries can be considered to be de facto abolitionist: the death penalty is still included in their legislation but they have not carried out any executions for at least ten years³.
• Therefore, 140 countries have abolished capital punishment de jure or de facto.
• However, 58 countries and territories maintain and apply the death penalty⁴ and 21 countries carried out executions in 2013⁵.

Progress towards universal abolition of the death penalty

Since 2002, 21 countries have abolished capital punishment for all crimes (Cyprus, Serbia, Montenegro, Armenia, Bhutan, Greece, Samoa, Senegal, Turkey, Mexico, the Philippines, Albania, the Cook Islands, Kirghizstan, Rwanda, Uzbekistan, Argentina, Burundi, Togo, Gabon and Latvia).

Of the 54 countries of the African Union, only five can be said to have definitely executed prisoners in 2013: Botswana, Nigeria, Somalia, Sudan and South Sudan.

On the American continent, the United States was the only country to carry out executions in 2013.

In Europe, only Belarus continues to use capital punishment and carry out executions.

Death sentences and executions

In 2013, most recorded executions took place in China, Iran, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and the United States.

• Asia

Official national statistics on the application of capital punishment in China remain a State secret but it is estimated that several thousand executions took place in 2013.

In Asia there were no executions in Mongolia for the fifth consecutive year. However, the use of executions in Bangladesh, North Korea, India, Indonesia, Japan, Pakistan and Vietnam were particularly worrying.

• Middle East

According to information gathered by the Abdorrahman Boroumand Foundation, Iran executed at least 715 people in 2013.

In Iraq at least 169 executions took place in 2013, according to a survey by the AFP, and Saudi Arabia executed at least 78 people, one fewer than in 2012.

• North America

In the United States 9 States carried out executions in 2013, ending the lives of 39 people (compared to 43 in 2012 and 2011, 46 in 2010 and 52 in 2009), bringing the total number of people executed since capital punishment was reinstated in 1977 to 1,359.

Execution methods Since 2002 the following methods have been used:

- Somalia
- Taiwan
- Yemen
- Decapitation
- Saudi Arabia
- Electrocution
- United States
- Hanging
- Afghanistan
- the Palestinian Authority [Hamas in Gaza]
- Bangladesh
- Botswana
- India
- Iraq
- Iran
- Japan
- Pakistan
- Sudan
- South Sudan
- Lethal injection
- China
- United States
- Vietnam
- Stoning
- Afghanistan
- Iran

International instruments in support of abolition

One of the major advances achieved over the last few years is the adoption of international treaties whereby States undertake not to use capital punishment.

- The Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming to abolish the death penalty, which has been ratified by 80 States. Four other countries have signed the Protocol, signifying their intention to become party to this instrument at a later date;
- the Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights, covering abolition of the death penalty, which has been ratified by 13 States on the American continent;
- Protocol N°. 6 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (European Convention on Human Rights) concerning the abolition of the death penalty, which has been ratified by 46 European States and signed by one other;
- Protocol N°. 13 to the European Convention on Human Rights concerning the abolition of the death penalty in all circumstances, which has been ratified by 43 European States and signed by two others.

Protocol N°. 6 to the European Convention on Human Rights provides for abolition of the death penalty in times of peace and Protocol N°. 13 for the total abolition of the death penalty under all circumstances. The two other Protocols provide for the total abolition of capital punishment with the possibility of issuing a reservation for the death penalty in times of war.

Information taken from the brochure and detailed fact sheet prepared by Jillian Rupnow from the law firm Fredikson & Byron P.A. at the request of The Advocates for Human Rights.
The paradox of retentionist Caribbean nations: few executions but a core of countries firmly opposed to abolition

The last execution in the Caribbean took place in 2008 in Saint Kitts and Nevis; the one before that was in 2003. However, a number of countries in the region maintain the death penalty in their legislation, regularly call for a return to executions and are advocates for its use internationally.

Thus, when Trinidad and Tobago ratified the American Convention on Human Rights it specified that “the death penalty is not an issue related to human rights.”

Seven years after ratification, Trinidad and Tobago denounced the treaty so as not to be held to its implications concerning the application of capital punishment.

In 2008 Jamaica voted to maintain the death penalty in its legislation. More recently, in January 2013 President Raul Castro justified the death penalty in Cuba in these terms: “Our laws allow the death penalty. This action has been suspended, but it’s on the books, because one time we suspended it and all this did was to stimulate acts of aggression and sabotage against my country.”

Further, government civil servants in Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago have expressed their desire to increase the number of sentences and executions.

Recently, Saint Kitts and Nevis and Trinidad and Tobago amended their legislation to increase the kinds of evidence admissible in a criminal trial, particularly statements from witnesses who have retracted them or who cannot appear in court.

In Jamaica some articles in the Charter of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms, adopted in April 2011, seem intended to overturn the effects of the historic ruling of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1993 in the case of Pratt and Morgan vs. Attorney General of Jamaica.

In Belize the 8th Amendment Bill was introduced in 2011 and aimed to modify Article 7 of the Constitution of Belize prohibiting torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The proposed amendment would preclude constitutional challenges to the death penalty by stating that certain circumstances previously found to violate Section 7 are not unconstitutional.

In effect, the proposed amendment would have allowed the authorities to resume executions. However, this draft law was not adopted.

The Caribbean is composed of 25 independent nations (Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Columbia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaraguan, Panama, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saint Lucia, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, and Venezuela) and 14 territories of the United States, France and the UK (Anguilla, Aruba, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, French Guyana, Guadeloupe, Saint Barthélemy, Martinique, Montserrat, the Dutch Antilles, Puerto Rico, Saint Martin, the Turks and Caicos Islands, and the American Virgin Islands).

Ten countries are abolitionist in law: Columbia, Costa Rica, El Salvador (for ordinary crimes), Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, the Dominican Republic and Venezuela. Some abolished the death penalty more than a century ago: in modern times Venezuela was the first country to have abolished the death penalty in 1863 when it became independent, followed by Costa Rica in 1877, Panama in 1903 and Columbia in 1909. They all voted in favour and most were co-sponsors of the UN General Assembly Resolution calling for a world moratorium on executions with a view to abolishing the death penalty, and all have ratified an international or regional treaty undertaking not to reintroduce the death penalty.

Only two countries are considered abolitionist in practice: Grenada and Suriname. They have not executed any prisoners sentenced to death since 1978 and 1982 respectively.

13 countries are retentionist: Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Cuba, Dominican, Guatemala, Guyana, Jamaica, Saint Kitts & Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saint Lucia and Trinidad and Tobago. Although most of these countries have not performed any executions in the last ten years, Amnesty International considers them to be retentionist because they do not have a policy not to carry out executions and they have not made any international commitments in that direction.

In 2008 Jamica voted to maintain the death penalty in its legislation. More recently, in January 2013 President Raul Castro justified the death penalty in Cuba in these terms: “Our laws allow the death penalty. This action has been suspended, but it’s on the books, because one time we suspended it and all this did was to stimulate acts of aggression and sabotage against my country.”

Further, government civil servants in Jamica and Trinidad and Tobago have expressed their desire to increase the number of sentences and executions.

Recently, Saint Kitts and Nevis and Trinidad and Tobago amended their legislation to increase the kinds of evidence admissible in a criminal trial, particularly statements from witnesses who have retracted them or who cannot appear in court.

In Jamaica some articles in the Charter of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms, adopted in April 2011, seem intended to overturn the effects of the historic ruling of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1993 in the case of Pratt and Morgan vs. Attorney General of Jamaica.

In Belize the 8th Amendment Bill was introduced in 2011 and aimed to modify Article 7 of the Constitution of Belize prohibiting torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The proposed amendment would preclude constitutional challenges to the death penalty by stating that certain circumstances previously found to violate Section 7 are not unconstitutional.

In effect, the proposed amendment would have allowed the authorities to resume executions. However, this draft law was not adopted.
A 9th draft amendment was then proposed which would prohibit "any challenge in any court of law on any ground whatsoever" concerning any amendment to the Constitution of Belize. In other words, it would eliminate any recourse to Belize's national courts to protect fundamental rights. Following advocacy work, the 9th draft amendment (now the "8th Amendment") was adopted at the end of 2011, without the provisions to restrict the competence of the courts in terms of fundamental rights. Such action generally aims to combat drugs-related violence in Caribbean countries. Internationally, 9 States (the Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Guyana, Jamaica, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and Trinidad and Tobago) have systematically voted against the UN General Assembly Resolutions calling for a moratorium on executions.

6 States (Barbados, Guyana, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and Trinidad and Tobago) have signed every Note Verbale dissociating them from the Resolution. Their opposition is so strong that the Caribbean vote against the resolutions represents more than a quarter of the vote opposed to the universal moratorium.

Some countries in the region have also rejected the recommendations made by international human rights organisations aiming to reduce the use of or even abolish the death penalty. For example, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago and Guyana have withdrawn from the 1st Optional Protocol to the ICCPR which allows individuals who have exhausted all national paths to make an appeal to the UN Human Rights Committee.

Historically, the region's Spanish-speaking countries have been at the forefront of abolition of the death penalty across the world. Venezuela was the first independent country in the world to abolish the death penalty in 1863. Costa Rica, Panama, Uruguay and Colombia all followed; the Dominican Republic and Haiti abolished it more recently. Guatemala and Cuba continue to apply capital punishment in law but they have both made undertakings to remove its use.

Conversely, most of the Commonwealth English-speaking countries have kept the death penalty in their penal systems. Worldwide, Commonwealth States represent 38% of retentionist States. To date, no scientific study has been able to demonstrate a link between crime rates and application of the death penalty. Costa Rica, which has been abolitionist for more than a century, has a low homicide rate, close to that of Antigua and Barbuda which is retentionist. Conversely, Honduras, an abolitionist State since 1956, has a higher crime rate than retentionist Jamaica.

The death penalty is often a desperate populist reaction to an increase in violent crime but it does not resolve the deep-rooted causes of criminality. Increasingly, governments have begun to accept that it is now urgent to make prevention and not punishment the priority. There are ways to fight crime such as increasing investment in education, youth development, job creation and reducing poverty and socio-economic inequality.

These measures have been observed in some countries in the Caribbean and seem to have had a positive impact.

Different answers to high homicides rates

According to the first global study on homicides published at the end of 2011 by the UN Office on Drugs and Crime, a lack of public safety has continued to increase and the number of homicides in the region has consistently increased since 1995.

Latin America and the Caribbean represent 8.5% of the world population and yet the region witnessed 27% of homicides worldwide, according to a report in 2012 by the UN Development Programme (UNDP). For example, gang-related homicides in Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago nearly doubled between 2009 and 2012 compared to the 2006-2009 period.

To date, no scientific study has been able to prove a link between crime rates and application of the death penalty. Costa Rica, which has been abolitionist for more than a century, has a low homicide rate, close to that of Antigua and Barbuda which is retentionist. Conversely, Honduras, an abolitionist State since 1956, has a higher crime rate than retentionist Jamaica. The death penalty is often a desperate populist reaction to an increase in violent crime but it does not resolve the deep-rooted causes of criminality. Increasingly, governments have begun to accept that it is now urgent to make prevention and not punishment the priority. There are ways to fight crime such as increasing investment in education, youth development, job creation and reducing poverty and socio-economic inequality.

These measures have been observed in some countries in the Caribbean and seem to have had a positive impact.
Moreover, at the beginning of 2010 the local government signed a memorandum of understanding with the federal justice ministry to cede jurisdiction concerning a few cases linked to violent crimes.

One of the side effects of that agreement was an increase in requests for capital punishment approved or in the process of being approved by the American ministry for justice.

Nevertheless, neither the agreement passed in 2010 nor the 1994 federal law relating to the death penalty have managed to reduce increasingly violent crime in the Puerto Rico archipelago.

The deterrent effect of the death penalty

The death penalty is often encouraged by those who think that it can act as a deterrent and have a positive impact on violent crime rates.

For example, in Trinidad and Tobago, which has one of the highest homicide rates in the world, the media often report that the death penalty is supported by most citizens. In a recent survey 91% of Trinidadians claimed to be in favour of the death penalty.

The political class in these countries often publicly claims that it supports capital punishment and disapproves of the procedural safeguards which make application of the death penalty more complicated and slower.

However, research into opinion polls shows that after declaring their support for the death penalty, most people change their minds when they are confronted with actual cases and given additional information. In the survey carried out in Trinidad and Tobago referred to above, only 49% of people questioned supported the death penalty with regard to specific scenarios.

Despite public opinion being favourable in several Caribbean countries, there is no evidence to support the deterrent theory.

This conclusion is corroborated by the homicide rates recorded in the Caribbean region given in the table below which show no correlation between homicide rates and the application of capital punishment.

Of the ten countries which record the highest homicide rates, three are abolitionist and seven are retentionist.

Of the ten countries which record the lowest homicide rates, eight are abolitionist and two are retentionist. In view of these figures, a Caribbean nation whose homicide rate is high is more likely to be retentionist while a nation displaying a low homicide rate is more likely to be abolitionist.

Five findings support the conclusion that deterrence of others is not, as many politicians in Trinidad and Tobago according to press reports appear to believe, an important reason why members of the public support the death penalty:

• First, those who favoured the mandatory death penalty placed deterrence of others very low down on their list of reasons: well below retribution.

• Second, when asked what their view would be if the death penalty were shown by new scientific evidence not to have an extra deterrent effect above long imprisonment, the majority of supporters of capital punishment, especially of the mandatory death penalty, said that this information would not make them change their mind.

• Third, that when they were asked to judge scenario cases and to give their reasons for choosing a death sentence as the appropriate punishment only a tiny proportion (just over one per cent) spontaneously mentioned its likely restraining effect on others.

• Fourth, supporters of the death penalty were in favour of retaining it even though three-quarters of them thought that it would be easier to convict persons of murder if it were to be abolished.

• Fifth, when asked which of several policies they thought would be the most effective in controlling violent crime leading to death, only just over a third (36%) of those who favoured the mandatory death sentence stated ‘a greater number of executions of murderers’. This percentage decreases to 21% if we take into account the every respondent in the survey. The most favoured approach was through social policies that would provide better moral education for young people.

Similarly, a recent study on Trinidad and Tobago, a country which applies a mandatory death sentence for murder, has shown that between 1950 and 1980 homicide rates changed little despite the executions carried out every year. Similar studies in the United States and elsewhere show that there is no positive correlation between executions and homicide rates.

Regardless of public opinion concerning the effectiveness of capital punishment as a deterrent against violent crime, there is no evidence to support that position.
Restricted application of the death penalty: detailed regional jurisprudence

Procedure for imposing the death penalty in the Caribbean region

For the countries which maintain the death penalty the penal procedure is similar across the entire Caribbean region. Most death penalty cases in Caribbean countries are initially judged before a local high court. Those found guilty and sentenced to death can appeal to a local or national appellate court. Finally, depending on the country a final appeal can be brought before the Judicial Committee of the London Privy Council (JCPC) or the Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ).

The CCJ is a hybrid institution which settles disagreements within the Caribbean Community (CARICOM). It is at the same time the highest court of appeal on civil and criminal matters for Barbados, Belize and Guyana, and an international court charged with ensuring application and interpretation of the Treaty of Chaguaramas establishing the Community of the Caribbean.

The CARICOM member States are Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Haiti, Jamaica, Montserrat, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname and Trinidad and Tobago. For these countries the CCJ does not have international competence to hear individual complaints concerning alleged human rights violations. In 2006 the CCJ examined its first death penalty case, Boyce and Joseph vs. Barbados, and delivered its decision, establishing jurisprudence.

The Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court (ECSC) is another regional court. It was created in 1967 by the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States (OECs). The following countries fall within the Court’s jurisdiction: Anguilla, Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Grenada, Montserrat, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and the British Virgin Islands.

The Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court is split into two parts: the High Court and the Court of Appeal. High Court judges are based in each member State, while the Appeal Court judges are based in Saint Lucia and travel to each territory to hear appeals. Final appeals are brought before the Judicial Committee of the London Privy Council.

Caribbean Human Development Report 2012

“Across the region, public opinion polls and newspaper headlines continue to reflect the sentiments of a populace that is being forced to adjust to the problem of crime and violence.

One of the attitudes most consistently reported, found through research and mentioned by policy makers is support for the death penalty. […] This preference for severe penalty can be explained by rising crime rates and the politicization of crime. As the UNDP Citizen Security Survey 2010 shows, 63.2 percent of respondents across the region support the death penalty.

The support is strongest in the six British Commonwealth countries. In the outlier, Suriname, only 35.7 percent of the respondents support the death penalty. This former colony of the Netherlands more closely reflects the position of the European Union in its rejection of the death penalty. Caribbean citizens overwhelmingly support the death penalty. Politicians therefore tend to view support for the death penalty as a vote winner and continue to advocate for its return.

“The UNDP Citizen Security Survey 2010 demonstrates that, despite the ambiguities in public opinion, support for crime prevention policies such as increased investment in education, youth development, job creation and poverty reduction is fairly universal across the Caribbean.

The findings of the UNDP Citizen Security Survey 2010 show that, despite a desire to see perpetrators punished, citizens also expressed strong support for methods that emphasize social intervention.”

Final appeals are brought before the Judicial Committee of the London Privy Council.

Caribbean Human Development Report 2012

“Across the region, public opinion polls and newspaper headlines continue to reflect the sentiments of a populace that is being forced to adjust to the problem of crime and violence.

One of the attitudes most consistently reported, found through research and mentioned by policy makers is support for the death penalty. […] This preference for severe penalty can be explained by rising crime rates and the politicization of crime. As the UNDP Citizen Security Survey 2010 shows, 63.2 percent of respondents across the region support the death penalty.

The support is strongest in the six British Commonwealth countries. In the outlier, Suriname, only 35.7 percent of the respondents support the death penalty. This former colony of the Netherlands more closely reflects the position of the European Union in its rejection of the death penalty. Caribbean citizens overwhelmingly support the death penalty. Politicians therefore tend to view support for the death penalty as a vote winner and continue to advocate for its return.

“The UNDP Citizen Security Survey 2010 demonstrates that, despite the ambiguities in public opinion, support for crime prevention policies such as increased investment in education, youth development, job creation and poverty reduction is fairly universal across the Caribbean.

The findings of the UNDP Citizen Security Survey 2010 show that, despite a desire to see perpetrators punished, citizens also expressed strong support for methods that emphasize social intervention.”

The CCJ is a hybrid institution which settles disagreements within the Caribbean Community (CARICOM). It is at the same time the highest court of appeal on civil and criminal matters for Barbados, Belize and Guyana, and an international court charged with ensuring application and interpretation of the Treaty of Chaguaramas establishing the Community of the Caribbean.

The CARICOM member States are Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Haiti, Jamaica, Montserrat, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname and Trinidad and Tobago. For these countries the CCJ does not have international competence to hear individual complaints concerning alleged human rights violations. In 2006 the CCJ examined its first death penalty case, Boyce and Joseph vs. Barbados, and delivered its decision, establishing jurisprudence.

The Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court (ECSC) is another regional court. It was created in 1967 by the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States (OECs). The following countries fall within the Court’s jurisdiction: Anguilla, Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Grenada, Montserrat, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and the British Virgin Islands.

The Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court is split into two parts: the High Court and the Court of Appeal. High Court judges are based in each member State, while the Appeal Court judges are based in Saint Lucia and travel to each territory to hear appeals. Final appeals are brought before the Judicial Committee of the London Privy Council.

The Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court has passed several important decisions concerning application of the death penalty in its member States.

Despite these apparent procedural safeguards, several retentionist countries in the Caribbean face challenges which lead to due process violations for those facing the death penalty.

For example, Amnesty International notes several factors which contribute to these problems: too many cases to be processed; an inadequate witness protection programme; insufficient juries; high crime rates; poor forensic capabilities and delays in processing evidence in crime labs.

Regional human rights mechanisms

The Inter-American Court of Human Rights and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights were created within the framework of the American Convention on Human Rights, a regional treaty which came into force on 18 July 1978.

The treaty is mandatory for the 25 nations which have ratified it (see table on p.27). In 1959 the Organisation of American States created, via the treaty, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights.

The latter has several functions including analysing and investigating submissions concerning human rights violations, recommending measures that nations should adopt to protect human rights and presenting cases to the Inter-American Court.

The Inter-American Court was created in May 1979. The Court’s jurisdiction does not automatically cover States which have ratified the Convention because they must also explicitly recognise the Court’s jurisdiction.

Of the English-speaking Caribbean countries, only Barbados has recognised it. Cases are initiated at the Inter-American Court when an individual or a nation which is party to the treaty files a petition to the Inter-American Commission.

The Commission can then put a case to the Court for it to examine. As we indicate below, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and the Inter-American Commission have been crucial in protecting human rights and developing death penalty jurisprudence in the Caribbean region.

Development of regional jurisprudence

Although people are sentenced to death in the Caribbean region every year, executions are increasingly rare, particularly thanks to the development of jurisprudence in the Caribbean region in terms of application of the death penalty.

The CCJ was established on 14 February 2001. The CCJ returned its first death penalty decision on 8 November 2006 in the case of Boyce and Joseph vs. Barbados. In that case, the CCJ found that the mandatory imposition of the death penalty violated the right to life because of its arbitrary nature and its failure to restrict imposition of the death penalty to the most serious crimes only.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (JCPC) established an important restriction concerning the death penalty in the case of Pratt and Morgan vs. Jamaica in which it set out that executions taking place more than five years after sentencing were inhuman or degrading punishment.

The Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court (ECSC) decided similarly, considering that there was a presumption that a prisoner may not be executed after spending five years on “death row”. Finally, the Inter-American Court has stated that retentionist countries may not extend application of capital punishment to new additional offences.

The Inter-American Commission and Court human rights bodies have issued several opinions concerning application of the death penalty in countries which fall within their jurisdiction.

In particular, the Inter-American Court and several national courts in the Caribbean region have issued court decisions stating that mandatory death sentences are unconstitutional.

The Inter-American Court has also stated that, although discretionary application of capital punishment is appropriate in some cases, its application must be uniquely limited to “the most serious crimes”.

Mandatory death penalty

At the end of the 1990s the issue of mandatory death sentences was raised in the Caribbean region when the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights began to receive a large number of submissions concerning mandatory death sentences. Over the course of the first three cases, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the Court of Human Rights “established that the automatic imposition of the death penalty without consideration of the individual circumstances of the offender is incompatible with the rights to life, humane treatment, and due process”.

The first case was that of Hilaire, Constantine and Benjamin vs. Trinidad and Tobago. In that case, the parties judged and accused of
Ernest Lockhart, Bahamas

Ernest Lockhart was sentenced to death for the premeditated murder of another man. Ernest Lockhart was 21 years of age when he shot Caxton Smith in the back. On Lockhart's appeal, the JCPC applied a 2-part test as used by the Board in Trimmingham v. The Queen (2009) UKPC 25 where, in order for a court to impose a death sentence, two requirements must be met:

1) the crime must be a worst-of-the-worst offense,
2) there must be no reasonable possibility of reform, and the goals of the punishment cannot be accomplished by any other means. In this case, the JCPC found that Ernest Lockhart's crime of murder did not constitute the worst-of-the-worst for purposes of applying the death penalty. The Privy Council also commented on the second prong of the test and noted that the evidence relied upon by the lower court judge was insufficient to pronounce a sentence of death. In applying the Trimmingham decision, the JCPC affirmed that a psychiatrist report is necessary to properly address the question of reform. In Lockhart, the lower court's reliance on the probation report was not sufficient to issue a sentence of death. Upon remand, Lockhart was resentenced to 54 years in prison.

murder were sentenced to death by hanging in conformity with Trinidad and Tobago's Offences Against the Person Act.

By virtue of that law, a judge or a jury does not have discretionary power after sentencing to take into consideration the particular circumstances of the case in order to determine an appropriate punishment. The Court decided that mandatory application of the death penalty was an arbitrary violation of the right to life, in violation of the American Convention on Human Rights.

The second turning point concerning mandatory application of the death penalty was the case of Boyce vs. Barbados. Similarly to the Hilaire case, the question posed was that of mandatory application of the death penalty, this time in Barbados. In the Boyce case, the main difficulty resided in the fact that Barbados had issued a reservation to the American Convention on Human Rights, precluding a review of the country's use and method of execution. However, the Court considered that the text of the reservation did not prevent examination of the mandatory nature of the death penalty.

The Court decided that mandatory application of the death penalty violated the right to life in the American Convention on Human Rights for two reasons. Firstly, Barbados law did not distinguish between accidental and intentional death, therefore violating the mandate of the treaty aiming to limit application of the death penalty to the "most serious crimes".

Secondly, the Court considered that, despite the option to apply to the executive branch for a commuted sentence, not taking into account the particular circumstances of each case represented an arbitrary violation of the right to life.

The third case, the most recent, was that of Cadogan vs. Barbados. In this instance, it again concerned the impossibility for the sentenced person putting forward any mitigating circumstances in order to avoid the death penalty.

The Court reiterated the principles put forward in the Boyce case. Barbados did not contest the principles of the Boyce case, according to which the mandatory death penalty violated the American Convention on Human Rights. On the contrary, the State stated that the law was in the process of being amended in conformity with the Boyce case.

However, the Court claimed that not only did the law continue to exist, in derogation of the American Convention on Human Rights, but that moreover it had been applied in the Cadogan case via the judgement and the death sentence.

Therefore, the Court considered that Barbados had violated the treaty by (1) not amending its legislation in conformity with the Boyce case, and (2) applying the mandatory death penalty in the Cadogan case after the decision passed in the Boyce case.

The regional appeal courts followed the same jurisprudence and in 2001 the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court considered that the mandatory death penalty as set out in the Constitution of Saint Lucia was "inhuman and degrading".

The Court applied the same reasoning in Jamaica in 2004 in the case of Watson vs. The Queen and in 2006 in the Bahamas in the case of Bové vs. The Queen. In three successive decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 2002 for Belize, Saint Kitts and Nevis and Saint Lucia, it was established that the mandatory death penalty constituted inhuman treatment because it did not take into account any mitigating circumstances.

Following these decisions, the national courts of Saint Lucia, Dominica, Belize, the Bahamas, Guyana, Jamaica and Grenada have considered that the mandatory death penalty was unconstitutional and granted judges discretionary power to apply lesser punishments.

Barbados has still not amended its legislation despite the decisions of the Boyce and Cadogan cases. Guyana abolished automatic
Unprecedented activism in the Caribbean

Unprecedented activism in the Caribbean in 2010. However, the death penalty remains applicable for some categories of homicide.

Currently, Trinidad and Tobago and Barbados are the only countries in the Caribbean region to maintain mandatory death sentences. Barbados has apparently initiated the procedure to abolish the mandatory death penalty as per its commitment 2009 in order to conform to the decisions of the Inter-American Court.

Nevertheless, to date the country’s legislation has still not been amended. Trinidad and Tobago maintain the mandatory death penalty even though the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council considers this practice to be a violation of the constitutional right not to be subjected to cruel and unusual punishment. Adriel Brathwaite the Attorney General and Minister of Home Affairs of Barbados, announced in March 2014 that the country would abolish the mandatory death penalty.

Cruel and inhuman punishment

Privy Council’s Judicial Committee and human rights bodies have also managed to limit the amount of time that an individual spends on death row. Spending more than five years there has been considered to be a violation of the right not to be subjected to “inhuman and degrading treatment”.

In 1993 in its decision in the case of Pratt and Morgan vs. The Attorney General of Jamaica, the Privy Council’s Judicial Committee considered that imposition of the death penalty after an excessive period of time violated the right to human treatment. The decision immediately benefited fifty prisoners who were on death row in Jamaica and whose sentences were reduced to life in prison.

In the cases which followed in Caribbean Commonwealth nations the Privy Council’s Judicial Committee followed this five-year principle. For example, in 1996 in the case of Guerra vs. Baptiste, the Privy Council considered that four years and ten months was too long in Trinidad and Tobago.

In 1997 in the case of Henfield vs. The Attorney General of the Bahamas, the Privy Council considered that three and a half years was an inappropriate delay.

Another issue concerning the right to human treatment in the Caribbean is the method of execution. Most Caribbean countries practice execution by hanging. Although cases have been brought before the regional courts to decide whether the method of execution constitutes cruel, inhuman or degrading punishment, no definitive decision has been made on this issue.

Despite the “gruesome and degrading” nature of the punishment, several retentionist countries in the region have taken steps to ensure that the form of punishment cannot be considered to be unconstitutional.

However, other international courts, such as the European Court of Human Rights, have considered that this practice is inhuman and degrading as it is ineffective and very painful.
The Founding Act of the Greater Caribbean for Life

In the Caribbean region civil society seeking abolition of the death penalty faces strong opposition from abolitionists in governments and public opinion in the region. In October 2011 in a joint effort to reduce use of the death penalty in the region, the first international conference on the death penalty in the Caribbean was held in Madrid, Spain. During that meeting, a Working Group composed of abolitionist member organisations from Belize, Jamaica, Puerto Rico and Trinidad and Tobago was formed.

This Group focused on the issue of the death penalty with a view to preparing an abolitionist network in the Caribbean and in particular made several joint statements with Amnesty International and co-organised the conference “Moving beyond the death penalty debate in Trinidad and Tobago” at the University of the West Indies in October 2012.

The 11th World Day Against the Death Penalty focusing on capital punishment in the Caribbean region led to the organisation of a conference and the formal creation of the Greater Caribbean for Life.

A regional conference and an abolitionist network to launch action in the Caribbean

A number of activists, jurists and exonerees met in Trinidad and Tobago to debate strategies for abolition and to join Greater Caribbean for Life. This conference also strengthened local civil society in the region through capacity building activities, the creation of ready-to-use tools and coordinated action.

The Greater Caribbean for Life, a coalition of individuals and abolitionist organizations in the region, was officially established on 2 October 2013 with the adoption of its constitution and the election of its first Executive Committee.

This launch occurred at the end of debates and discussions between activists and jurists from 12 countries. In their final statement, they undertook to “campaign for the abolition of the death penalty, including by creating a culture to promote and protect human rights.”

On the eve of the creation of this network, a conference on “The death penalty in the context of public security: neither right nor effective” took place at the Law Faculty of the University of the West Indies in Trinidad and Tobago. The day gave rise to intense and productive debates on several subjects connected to the struggle against capital punishment such as activism among the youth, education, the fight against crime and administration of justice, which prepared the ground for the Greater Caribbean for Life’s strategy.

Among the speakers, Richard Blewitt, a representative from the UN Development Programme in Trinidad and Tobago, raised the perception of safety by those living in the region. “A poll of 1,000 citizens in Trinidad and Tobago in 2011 showed that 91% are in favour of the death penalty but only 26% support the mandatory death penalty. Most of those questioned also said that increasing the number of executions would be the least effective way of reducing crime” he said.

A touching moment occurred at the Conference with the story of three women belonging to the Hope support group whose family members had been killed. One of them, Merlyn Gowrie, said “I don’t see why the death penalty should exist: my son will never come back. Do something against crime instead.”

The conference welcomed more than 100 people of different nationalities and backgrounds (students, prisoners, prison wardens, lawyers, diplomats, academics, journalists and activists). The media covered it well, therefore helping to raise awareness in a society where public opinion remains strongly in favour of the death penalty.

Several events followed in the region, particularly a screening in Trinidad and a tour organised by Amnesty International to broadcast the stories of Selwyn Strachan, previously sentenced to death in Grenada, and Kevin Rivera Medina, a lawyer and representative of families of victims in Puerto Rico, in three countries: Grenada, Jamaica and Dominica.

Since 2nd October, the Caribbean abolitionist network has continued to develop and the Executive Committee, elected in October 2013, met in Puerto Rico on 11th and 12th January 2014 to draw up its strategy to combat the death penalty in the region.

A press release published after the meeting reaffirmed that “the ultimate aim of the Network is to achieve permanent abolition of the death penalty in every country in the Caribbean, as well as the creation of a culture of respect for the human right to life and the inherent dignity of all human beings. The interim aims are to establish a moratorium on application of the death penalty in the region and abolition of the mandatory death penalty in Barbados and Trinidad and Tobago.”

The Network will concentrate its efforts on the English-speaking countries in the Caribbean, pushing them in particular to “at least abstain” from the next vote on the resolution of the UN calling for a moratorium on the death penalty in December 2014.

The Executive Committee of the Caribbean Network will do everything possible to persuade governments in the region of the legitimacy of the moratorium, while remaining aware of the difficulties: “We know that it is unrealistic to think about abolishing the death penalty in the English-speaking Caribbean in the near future”, recognised the President, Leela Ramdeen.

She added, “after the creation of the Caribbean Network, Chiara Sangiorgio from Amnesty International and Nicole Sylvester and myself for the Network met the Justice Minister in Trinidad and Tobago who clearly indicated that the justice ministers of the English-speaking Caribbean had met and had agreed to vote “no” for the moratorium resolution.”

The Caribbean network is also seeking to “encourage Trinidad and Tobago and Barbados to abolish mandatory death penalties” because those two countries are the only ones to have kept these “scandalous” punishments, according to Ramdeen. She said that her own country, Trinidad and Tobago, “uses the death penalty without thinking about the profound causes of crime or identifying strategies which could really help our country move forward.”

On 31 January 2014 Greater Caribbean for Life was officially registered as a non-profit organisation in Puerto Rico, therefore giving it a legal status.

Positioning in the region

As the events of the World Day Against the Death Penalty unfolded on an unprecedented scale in the region, local activists and international organisations clearly took a position against capital punishment in the Caribbean.

The World Day Against the Death Penalty has never been so visible in the Caribbean. Chosen as the central theme of the annual international abolitionist event, citizens of Trinidad and Tobago were invited to a free screening of a documentary on capital punishment, Puerto-Ricans were able to meet Dr Luis Arroyo Zapatero, Director of the International Academic Network for Abolition of Capital Punishment, or follow a conference on criticism of capital punishment in the work of the famous Spanish painter Francisco de Goya. A group of individuals previously sentenced to death and lawyers undertook a tour of three islands in the Antilles and the National Human Rights Commission in Mexico devoted half a day to the issue of capital punishment in the company of diplomats, academics and activists.

The new Greater Caribbean for Life network issued a press release for the World Day, calling for “the governments of countries which still use the death penalty in the Caribbean to urgently and effectively tackle crime without applying the death penalty. The number of murders has increased in the Caribbean over the last ten years. Faced with this increase in criminality, governments present the death penalty as a way of controlling crime, despite the absence of evidence as to its deterrent effect, and are not investing in more effective solutions which would prevent or reduce crime in the long-term and would respond to the needs of victims through a reparative approach to justice.”

Amnesty International, a member organisation of the World Coalition, supported this position with “Not Making us safer”, a detailed analysis of crime, public safety and the death penalty published on 10th October.

The document brings together comprehensive data on crime rates, the status of the death penalty and international law in several regions of the world and concludes: “in the Greater Caribbean, there is no correlation between retention of the death penalty and low crime rates: six of the ten countries with the highest homicide rates in the region retain the death penalty (the Bahamas, Belize, Guatemala, Jamaica, St Kitts and Nevis, and Trinidad and Tobago). Indeed, in St Kitts and Nevis, the number of murders increased from 23 to 27 in the year following the execution of Charles Elroy Laplace in December 2008.”

In a press release published for the World Day, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) also “called on all OAS member states which still use the death penalty to abolish it or at least introduce a moratorium on its application.” The IACHR is the body for the protection of human rights in the Organisation of American States.

It welcomed progress in the region, particularly the reduction in the number of mandatory death sentences: “The development of inter-American standards establishing that the death penalty contravenes the American Convention and the American Declaration [of Human Rights], as well as interaction between inter-American human rights bodies and the legal offices of the Commonwealth, among other factors, have led to progress in eliminating mandatory death sentences in most Caribbean countries. The IACHR expects further progress in this direction until mandatory death penalties are abolished in all countries in the region.”

Local media outlets also extended the space devoted to the debate on the death penalty. Various media outlets in Antigua, Barbados, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, Mexico and Venezuela broadcast information about events taking place for 10th October and the positions of the Inter-American Commission, the UN and the European Union.

Media echo was also heard in countries in South America and the number of press cuttings in Spanish considerably increased in 2013.
Activism remains strong in the rest of the world

In 2013, 394 initiatives were recorded in 90 countries spread across all five continents.

In 2012, 407 initiatives had been recorded in 76 countries. There were fewer events organised in 2013 as 2012 was the 10th World Day and mobilisation was stronger than ever. However, actions were taken in more countries in 2013.

The difference relates to the activism of European countries, particularly the contribution of the 42 European foreign affairs ministers who signed an appeal for abolition of the death penalty on 10th October.

Please refer to Appendix 1 for a comprehensive list of events recorded by the World Coalition.

Practical Sheet 1
HOW TO ORGANISE A FILM FESTIVAL ON THE DEATH PENALTY

- Contact cinemas and other organisations in your country;
- Choose a theme for the festival with a catchy title;
- Choose a dozen films about the theme with a variety of countries and cultures (European, American, Asian films, etc.), content and subject matter (cases of innocence, stories of prisoners sentenced to death, social pressure faced by victims’ families, political executions, the abolitionist movement, the social and economic stakes, etc.), and genre (blockbusters, art house films, documentaries, etc.). You will find a list of films on the death penalty in the World Day activism kit;
- Arrange subtitles if the films do not already exist in your language;
- Organise debates after the films to encourage discussion with the audience. Invite experts, academics and directors to interact with the audience and explore their impressions of the film and their opinion of the death penalty.

ASIA – PACIFIC (97 events in 14 countries)

In a region where sentences and executions are most numerous, this year recorded significant activism for the second consecutive year with 97 events (compared to 81 in 2012, 57 in 2011 and 30 in 2010). The large number of events was made possible thanks in particular to the film festivals organised in Taiwan and Hong Kong and the inter-regional conference organised by the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in Bangkok, Thailand.

AMERICAS (52 events in 9 countries)

As well as the Caribbean, where there was unprecedented activism in 2013, members of the World Coalition in the United States responded to the call in large numbers. The Center for Constitutional Rights and the International Federation for Human Rights (FIDH) launched a joint report on the death penalty in the United States called “Discrimination, torture and executions”.

Similarly, to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the Journey of Hope tour, a series of events took place across the State of Indiana from 10th to 18th October. A 3-day conference brought together the main American abolitionist organisations, including people directly affected by the death penalty such as families of murder victims and those cleared of any offence.

Practical Sheet 2

WORKING WITH UNIVERSITIES

Many events for World Day are organised in universities, which would usually provide rooms free of charges and encourage students to attend. In 2013, it was the case for example in Trinidad & Tobago, Puerto Rico, and Hong Kong.

• Get in touch with a professor from university if there is one in your organisation or in the local civil society; you may also ask your personal network to check if anyone has connections with the university.
• Contact the university and suggest organising activities for World Day (it can be anything from a 1 hour session during a class to a two-day conference on the death penalty).
• If you are in contact with the law school, you may organise something for law students with lawyers defending people on death row for example.
• Make sure you agree on what the university is ready to commit to (providing a room, on campus information, official statement by the dean, etc.).
• Pay attention to security regulations within the university, opening hours (especially on weekends) and safety measures, including its insurance policy.
• Make sure you have sufficient materials (posters, leaflets, information sheets, etc.).
• Advertise the event and make sure the size of the room allows for a large amount of participants if desired.

MIDDLE EAST AND NORTH AFRICA (19 events in 7 countries)

In 2013 activism only reached significant levels in countries where the World Coalition has active member organisations such as Morocco, Tunisia and Lebanon.

There was a significant decline compared to last year as the number of events dropped from 40 to 19. The organisation of a Regional Congress Against the Death Penalty in Rabat in 2012 had led to the involvement of a large number of abolitionists in the region which was not the case in 2013.

Further, many players in the region were in Paris and Geneva for two conferences for parliamentarians and had therefore not organised events in their own countries.

For more information about parliamentary networks, read “The abolitionist movement looks to parliamentarians”:

And watch the video:

Initiated at the Regional Congress on the death penalty, the first Parliamentary Network against the death penalty in Morocco was officially established on 26 February 2013 on the occasion of its constitutive General Assembly held in Parliament in Rabat under the theme “the legislature, key player for the protection of the right to life.” After deliberations on the objectives and tasks of the network, the Assembly adopted the founding document which was signed by 208 parliamentarians, members of the 8 groups present in the House of Representatives (WFP, UC, PPS, PES Group Istiqlal, RNI, MP) and two major unions in the chamber of Advisors (UT and FDT). It also elected a Steering Committee consisting of seven members.

A world first, this network is to achieve the following objectives:
1 - Develop a bill to abolish the death penalty;
2 - Encourage Morocco to vote in favor of the resolution of the UN General Assembly (UNGA) on the adoption of a universal moratorium on the death penalty;
3 - Ask the authorities to formalize the moratorium on executions in place since 1993;
4 - Work to improve the conditions of detention on death row in Morocco, and;
5 - Support all efforts of the Moroccan civil society to abolish the death penalty, particularly those of the Moroccan Coalition Against the Death Penalty.

In June 2013, during the 5th World Congress Against the Death Penalty, the network launched a “call to all parliamentarians of States that have not yet abolished the death penalty in law to establish parliamentary networks against the death penalty in their own country, in coordination with the abolitionist movements in the region, and taking advantage of lessons from our experience.”

To learn more and read the founding document of the network (in French or Arabic):

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA (60 events in 16 countries)
As in the Middle East and North Africa, the number of activities organised in Sub-Saharan Africa dropped considerably in 2013: 60 events compared to 99 in 2012. The regional focus and the limited resources of many African organisations meant that activism was not as widespread as in 2012.

EUROPE (166 events in 44 countries)
As often occurs when the World Day focuses on a region in the world, activism was very strong in Europe. As well as the activism of the Ministries for Foreign Affairs in the 42 countries of the Council of Europe, which published a joint statement on 10th October, this year has been marked by a programme to raise awareness among public opinion in Belarus and the involvement of parliamentarians in the struggle against capital punishment.

For more information, read “Opinion divided on the death penalty in Belarus” online:
Belarusian public opinion on crime and punishment, including the death penalty

In 2013, Penal Reform International commissioned a detailed survey of public opinion about crime, punishment and the death penalty in Belarus. Market researchers, Satio, conducted the survey, interviewing 1,000 participants. The results show that opinions around capital punishment are more varied and nuanced than is often stated, while public attitudes about crime in general are strongly affected by respondents’ social position, background and emotions.

Key findings included: support for the death penalty is only 64% – significantly down on the 80% who supported capital punishment in a 1996 referendum; concerns about personal safety appeared to be a key reason for supporting the death penalty; three-quarters of respondents felt that convicting an innocent person was worse than letting the guilty go unpunished.

The Death Penalty in Malaysia: Public opinion on mandatory drug trafficking, murder and firearm offences

A detailed opinion survey commissioned in 2013 by the Death Penalty Project in Malaysia found that while most people initially respond supportively when asked about mandatory death sentences, their opinion changes when confronted with practical cases and additional information. The survey was conducted by Prof Roger Hood and Dr Mai Sato and questionnaires were administered by the independent market research company Ipsos.

Public Opinion on the Mandatory Death Penalty in Trinidad

A survey of the opinions of a representative sample of 1,000 residents of Trinidad, almost all of them citizens, on the very topical subject of the death penalty, in particular the support for and use of the mandatory death penalty for murder under current Trinidadian law was conducted in 2010. The survey was designed by Professor Roger Hood of Oxford University and Dr Florence Seemungal a Trinidadian psychologist, who is also attached to Oxford. It was commissioned by the Death Penalty Project in London in association with the Rights Advocacy Project of the University of the West Indies Faculty of Law. The survey was carried out by the experienced company, Market Facts and Opinions of Trinidad.

Public Opinion on the Death Penalty in China

Max Planck Institute for Foreign and International Criminal Law conducted the first large-scale representative population survey on public attitudes towards the death penalty in China, comprising approximate 4,500 respondents in three provinces. The public opinion survey was conducted in Beijing, Hubei and Guangdong provinces by the Research Center for Contemporary China (RCCC) at Peking University. The survey was administered as face-to-face interviews. The field work took place between November 1, 2007 and January 20, 2008.

Here are four examples of recent public opinion surveys commissioned by civil society groups and scholars in Belarus, Malaysia, Trinidad and China.
Media coverage remains very good

2013: 453 press cuttings in 94 countries
2012: 370 press cuttings in 90 countries
2011: 322 articles in 54 countries
2010: 280 articles in 52 countries

Media coverage increased compared to 2012 which was previously a record year. In particular, it nearly doubled in Asia and across the American continent. However, it reflects the drop in activism in Africa and the Middle East.

Please refer to Appendix 1 for a comprehensive list of events recorded by the World Coalition in 2013.

DISTRIBUTION OF MEDIA COVERAGE IN 2013

How to use this resource
This resource is designed to represent the basic knowledge and information needed to conduct a training workshop in an easily accessible format. This resource is intended to be adapted and modified based on thorough data-gathering and preparation that precedes every training workshop.

Trainers should create their own targeted presentation notes and materials, based on the content of these prepared training resources and information packs and the particular realities on the ground.

Learning objectives
• To demonstrate to journalists how to unravel the issues underlying the death penalty and find compelling story angles.
• To provide legal definitions to assist journalists and to ensure their story stands up to scrutiny.
• To provide journalists with various sources of information.

Furthermore, the media have to be able to tackle controversial subjects underlying the use of the death penalty, in particular society’s attachment to this form of punishment, and in some societies, its religious implications.

As such, reporting on the death penalty is not always a straightforward process, and journalists should take a nuanced approach.

Purpose
In reporting on the death penalty, the media has to tackle a number of issues. It has to understand the human rights implications of the death penalty and its alternative sanctions, as well as their country’s criminal justice policies.

Follow-up to the World Day

MENTAL DISORDER IS NEVER A CRIME

CARE. DON'T KILL.
World Day Against the Death Penalty 10.10.14
carenotkill.org
Abolition of the death penalty in the Caribbean

One of the recommendations stemming from the 10th World Day Against the Death Penalty was to plan long-term activities so that events linked to the World Day are not reduced to a single action but integrated into more long-term campaigns.

That was achieved for the 11th World Day which was part of a long-term strategy with the creation of an abolitionist network in the Caribbean officially registered with the authorities in Puerto Rico at the end of January 2014.

In order to ensure continuity and to support this new network, the World Coalition has also decided to hold its General Assembly in Puerto Rico in June 2014. This will be an opportunity to review the death penalty in the Caribbean and to participate in the action plan adopted by the Network last January.

Keep taking action!

The aims of the 2013 World Day were broadly achieved: the international dimension of the struggle for abolition of the death penalty among public opinion and the political decision-makers has increased with growing recognition of the World Day in the media and through inter-governmental organisations (African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the UN, etc.) and States, particularly in Europe and Latin America.

Progress is still possible in countries which still use capital punishment to strengthen abolitionist civil society and to put pressure on States so that they definitively end death sentences and executions.

In particular, the World Coalition must train civil society better to respond to the arguments of those who are in favour of the death penalty and to organise large-scale events. In particular, there are challenges in retentionist countries in Asia, the Middle East and Africa as demonstrated by the drop in activism and more limited media coverage this year in those regions.

In an effort to respond to these expectations, in December 2013 the World Coalition Steering Committee decided not to focus on a single region of the world for the World Days anymore because that tends to exclude others. Instead, it will always be connected to a theme with different regions and countries so that everyone feels included.

Thus, the 2014 World Day will focus on mental health and the death penalty with examples across the world, the 2015 World Day will focus on the death penalty for drug related offences and in 2016 on the death penalty and terrorism.

Further, the World Coalition will try as far as possible to hold its meetings in countries with a connection to the World Day, starting with the General Assembly in 2014 which will be held in the Caribbean.
